RE: Boone, Dameon Demond

CDC# AY3327

Labeling Inmate Dameon Boone as non-violent borders on the absurd; just ask [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] both of whom were robbed by him at gunpoint. On May 29, 2004, Mr. [REDACTED] was walking home when Inmate Boone and his co-defendant approached him and asked him if he had a light. When Mr. [REDACTED] responded he did not, he was shoved against a fence. Both Inmate Boone and his co-defendant pulled out handguns and went through his pockets. Mr. [REDACTED] was forced into an alley and patted down again. Inmate Boone and his cohort fled, but were not done with committing armed robberies that evening.

Mr. [REDACTED] also had the misfortune to run into Inmate Boone on May 29, 2004. Mr. [REDACTED] was approached by Inmate Boone and his co-defendant while he was seated in his car. They asked him for a cigarette, and when he looked up, the co-defendant pulled out a gun, racked it and put it to his head. The co-defendant took Mr. [REDACTED] money, cell phone and watch, and then threatened to kill him before jumping into a car with Inmate Boone and taking off. After leading the police on a high-speed chase and a subsequent foot pursuit Inmate Boone was apprehended. He was convicted of both of these violent felonies by a jury.

[REDACTED]

Inmate Boone's [REDACTED] record is replete with felonious gun possessions and drug dealing. His performance on parole has been dismal. After his first prison commitment in 1997, he was returned to custody three times for parole violations. Inmate Boone was released from prison in 2011 for the aforementioned robbery offenses and was discharged from parole on August 1, 2013. One month later he was arrested for his commitment offense (selling cocaine base.)

Inmate Boone is the definition of a violent recidivist felon. Granting him early release will make the community less safe. As such, the District Attorney of Sacramento is opposed to his early release.
